South Africa's major new 'transformation' law is coming – what you need to know

Staff Writer 20 July 2020

The Department of Employment and Labour has published a notice indicating that it plans to introduce the Employment Equity Amendment Bill to the National Assembly.

First announced by Labour minister Thulas Nxesi in July 2019, the bill promises to make a number of significant changes to the country's employment equity laws.

At the time, Nxesi said that this will include the setting of sector-specific employment targets to address the gross under-representation of black South Africans, women and persons with disabilities.

The new draft bill now explicitly states that the labour minister may set numerical targets for any national economic sector.

This must be done after consulting the National Minimum Wage Commission 'for the purpose of ensuring the equitable representation of suitably qualified people from designated groups at all occupational levels in the workforce'.

"A notice may set different numerical targets for different occupational levels, sub-sectors or regions within a sector or on the basis of any other relevant factor," the draft bill states.

"A draft of any notice that the Minister proposes must be published in the Gazette, allowing interested parties at least 30 days to comment thereon."

The bill also introduces a number of other regulatory changes.

Notably:

- An employment equity certificate of compliance will now become a precondition for access to state contracts.
- Employers with less than 50 employees will no longer have to report on their employment equity targets, irrespective of their turnover.

Therefore, this gazette 11148 refers to the publication of the amendment bill as it currently stands the EE Act is still enforced until proposed changes have been promulgated and gazetted.

Regarding your EE submissions:

BCH will continue with the planned submission which opens on 1st September 2020 and closes on the first Monday of January 2021.

Although we believe the proposed changes will at same point come into effect, till then it is status quo and will advise accordingly.

WORD FROM CEO

As South Africa moves towards the easing of our lockdown to level 2, businesses as a collective welcome the continued opportunities of returning to some semblances of normality again.

We have extended our promotions as our way to ensure that we stay true to our core values of providing professional yet cost effective solutions for our clients.

With Covid-19 posing real challenges for businesses and the people of South Africa we have all had to think outside the box thereby forcing businesses to reassess what they do and how they do it.

I believe that we all will emerge stronger and more adapt at embracing change which can in itself present opportunities that would otherwise not have been as pressing to implement as before.

BCH has during these challenging times been hard at work adapting to the new normal.

I foresee a future which is technologically driven and we all need to prepare for this.

We at BCH have been developing our new website with an E-commerce platform built-in which will be fully functional by the end of 2020.

The face of meetings, consultations and training interventions has also transformed into the digital world and although still a bit weird and impersonal for me, it can be the spring board to a greater footprint and growth for businesses.

Lastly we are very excited to announce that we are currently documenting one of our social economic development initiatives, whereby BCH is assisting an employee of one of our national clients to complete their safety compliance officer course at no charge.

We are offering 4 modules with 2 elective courses on each culminating in a comprehensive safety compliance training certificate.

This will assist our candidate's career path and hopefully will lead to future promotions within their organisation.

I encourage all businesses to embrace the necessary changes to survive, thrive and know that as South Africans together there is no such thing as impossible.
